

Reading Session: Process Tracing in International Political Economy

Date: 01 June 2017, 10.00-12.00 Room: InIIS, 7.2020

Moderation: Sebastian Botzem

We will read and discuss selected contributions from a special issue of NPE (see below). The full issue can be accessed online: <http://www.tandfonline.com/toc/cnpe20/21/5?nav=toCList>.

All participants are kindly asked to read and prepare all texts. In the first hour, each text will be shortly introduced by the respective text mentor and then discussed by the group. In the second hour of the session, we will jointly discuss some guiding questions on the usefulness of process tracing in IPE and potentially other fields of academic inquiry.

If you wish to participate, please send an email to smoeller@uni-bremen.de.

Literature

Trampusch, C. & Palier, B. (2016): Between X and Y: how process tracing contributes to opening the black box of causality. In: New Political Economy 21:5, 437-454.

Text mentor: Sebastian Möller

Falleti, T.G. (2016): Process tracing of extensive and intensive processes.

In: New Political Economy 21:5, 455-462.

Text mentor: Alexander Meland

Mahony, J. (2016): Mechanisms, Bayesianism, and process tracing.

In: New Political Economy 21:5, 493-499.

Text mentor: Marcus Wolf

Mayntz, R. (2016): Process tracing, abstraction, and varieties of cognitive interest.

In: New Political Economy 21:5, 484-488.

Text mentor: Nikolai Kotucha

Hay, C. (2016): Process tracing: a laudable aim or a high-tariff methodology?

In: New Political Economy 21:5, 500-504.

Text mentor: Nikolai Kotucha